ASPIRATIONAL DISTRICTS: SYMBOL OF MODINOMICS

There's consensus now across the political and ideological divide that even in the high-growth years, a large section of the population was not receiving the dividends of the progress India has made. There are a number of deeply-entrenched factors because of which every Indian has not been able to benefit from the GDP growth India has seen in the last two and a half decades post-liberalisation in 1991.

This is why, despite being the fastest growing large economy, India's performance on the Human Development Index (HDI) released by the UNDP to rank nations in terms of life expectancy, average income and years of schooling of its citizens remains modest. In 2016, India was placed at the 131th position among 188 nations ranked.

The crux of the Modinomics philosophy quite clearly is to take development to those Indians that have been left out of the progress made by the rest of the country in the 70 years since Independence. While this is true of every programme and scheme Prime Minister Narendra Modi has launched, the NITI Aayog's Aspirational Districts programme has highlighted that the incidence of under-development relative to the rest of the country is concentrated in 115 out of the total 172 districts considered the most backward in India.

Around 15 percent of India's total population resides in these identified districts and these quite clearly are the areas that need special attention. But if only the proportion of the population that is most deprived is looked at, then it is largely residing in these districts. The reasons are obvious. These districts have by and large

It must be said that the idea of focusing on backward regions is not an entirely new innovation. The United Progressive Alliance (UPA)-I government had launched the Backward Regions Grant Fund (BRGF) in 2007 for addressing regional imbalances and strengthening programme delivery by local-level institutions. But convergence proved difficult to deliver for the erstwhile Planning Commission.

A key difference now is the involvement of the 8,603 Gram Panchayats in the identified 115 districts that are covered in the Aspirational Districts Programme. And the use of behavioural science. The officials in a district naturally feel the pressure to outperform their colleagues in other districts because of the ranking system, inherent in the design of the programme.

The first thing officials are likely to do to make sure that the district climbs up on the ranking, and make their own performance stands out among their peer group, is to identify the low-hanging fruit of say ensure vacancies in schools get filled up in a timely way or quickly infrastructure created but awaiting operationalisation. Basically, attend to the small bottlenecks and put in place mechanisms to ensure they don't emerge again and institutional weaknesses or gaps are systematically addressed.

This can be something as simple as following up on failed loan applications or reaching out to school drop-outs, a district administrative machinery can begin to change attitudes and make a difference.
